

NORSE MYTHOLOGY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 2020

10:00 AM - NOON

TALLENT HALL, #182

When we think of the mythologies and epics that inform Western Civilization, we typically think of Greek myths and texts like the Odyssey. But this lecture will look north rather than south to understand the foundations of Western literary culture. The English language derives not directly from Latin and Greek, but rather from a Germanic ancestor, and has more in common with Old Norse. Indeed, although England was a Roman colony and is still marked by the technologies and architectures of the Roman Empire, it shares the weather, gods and culture of the Norsemen, who also invaded, colonized and inhabited parts of the island—and who stayed, whereas the Romans left.

Therefore, instead of Zeus and Hera, we will talk about Thor and Freyja; Asgard rather than Mount Olympus; and Ragnarok instead of Hades. The stories of Norse myth are fascinating and strange—the sky is made from a god's skull, and humans grow from his armpits—but they are also mediated through the lens of a Christianity recently come to Iceland. In fact, much of what we know about Norse mythology comes from Christian author Snorri Sturluson's 13th C Prose Edda, which gives us not only a list of Norse gods and goddesses, but also stories of the origins and destructions of these gods and their world. We will talk about the all-knowing one-eyed Odin and his pet ravens, Thor's battle with the trickster Loki's son, the world-circling Midgard Serpent, and the goddess Frigg's beautiful son Baldr, killed by mistletoe.

As context to these stories of the north, we will think about Norse culture as part of the North Atlantic, through the sculptures of the Inuit artist Abraham Anghik Ruben, who melds totemic and shamanic images shared by Viking and Inuit cultures. These two cultures, rarely thought of together, share climate, animal populations, and sometimes hunting and fishing practices. Ruben's work draws on elements of both cultures, asking us to think about northern mythologies in a more global way.

Questions? Contact Jo Ann Shea at 262-554-8081 or email joaz44@hotmail.com

4/22/20 Norse Mythology

Members: $7 Guests: $14

Register by April 12, 2020

Name _____ Check # _____

Email _____ Phone _____

Emergency contact name & phone _____

Deliver cash registration to the ALL office in Tallent Hall. Checks payable to UW-Parkside/ALL; deliver or mail to Vanessa. Credit card registration for members must be submitted online; an email with a member registration LINK will be sent around the 1st Monday each month. NO online credit card registrations can be accepted for guests. As registrations fill, members get preference in signing up.

Dana Oswald is Associate Professor of Literatures and Languages, and is a specialist on Old and Middle English literatures. Her current research is on women's medicine in early medieval England. She is a long-time student of mythologies and monsters, as is clear from her first book-length project, titled Monsters, Gender, and Sexuality in Medieval English Literature. She teaches courses on early British Literature, the History of the English Language, and Epic and Mythology.